

Revision Report

Overall, my group liked my design compositions. Each of the members thought that my design was readable, contrasting, and pleasing to the eye. They also thought that the navigation layout for my pages would ultimately be effective. My classmates offered a suggestion to change the fonts on my design comps. Originally, I used one font for the header, body, and link texts. Upon their suggestion, I made each section a different font. Although this is evident, each of the fonts were similar enough to still convey a theme of consistency.

I also received feedback on the background color of my body sections. As I left these sections white, my group offered a revision suggestion of making the body a variation of blue rather than just a plain white look. I have chosen to stick with the white background as I feel there is already enough blue on my page. I also believe that the white background will allow body texts to be easily read. My revisions were not substantial as I only changed the fonts of the text on my design comps.

The usability test was helpful as many of my group members had interesting points to note in my design comps. In the future I plan to get feedback from others when I create designs as many people had insightful revision suggestions I had not yet considered. By reviewing the work of others, I learned to find ways in which a site might be more easily navigable. Reviewing others, I also found other interesting design ideas which I can implement into future design compositions.
